Hi, folks. I'm Alan Watt and this is Cutting Through the Matrix on the 25th of September, 2012.

For newcomers, I always suggest you make good use of the website, cuttingthroughthematrix.com. There's lots of audios for free download there and lots of links too, where you can go through, basically, the reality, the higher reality that's above the media. The media is there for spinning and conditioning you. But there's a higher reality there. And it's really incredible just how much effort and organization has been put in over the last hundred-odd years, with big funding from your taxes generally, to create big organizations which control every facet of society, including all the trends that you follow, your cultural changes that you follow and adapt to and even the music that you like and so on. It's all done in a very scientific way. So, I go into that. I go into the big organizations that came together in the 1800's (who were the international bankers by the way - they already ruled a good part of the world through empires, because they owned the countries that were the heads of the empires) and they decided to take over the world's resources. All of the resources, including all the collateral, even human collateral and human resources. That's what we're called now: "manpower," "human resources," just like trees and so on. So, I go into the history of it; how they're after the water supplies, the food supplies and then altering the people themselves (the basic people down below), who live just like the people did in medieval times. They didn't know very much. They thought they did, but they didn't know much at all, about the higher reality above them. We're still the same way today. Actually, we're dumber. We're a lot dumber, because more science has been used upon us to convince us otherwise. So, help yourself there.

Remember too, you're the audience that bring me to you, because I don't bring on advertisers as guests and I don't get paid by advertisers and I have no shares in any product being sold to make you live forever and ever. So, all I have is the donations and the books and discs at cuttingthroughthematrix.com. And as I've said before, this is more than just a one-hour presentation at night; it's an all-day job, believe you me. And it's seven days a week and you don't get any holidays either. So, it's a hard task but that's what I've put myself to, because somebody had to come out and start changing even the direction of the whole patriot movement that was navel-gazing and didn't think it was affecting anybody outside the U.S. They thought it was all to do with internal takeovers within the U.S. And they didn't know this was a worldwide organization bringing the whole world in tune and in step along the same path to total, total domination. So it's done some good at least.

So, if you want the books and discs at cuttingthroughthematrix.com, I'd really appreciate it and from the U.S. to Canada, remember, you can use personal checks or international postal money orders. You can send cash or you can use PayPal. Across the world: Western Union, Money Gram, and PayPal. And straight donations really are awfully welcome.

As I've said before, people think they come to reality when something hits them personally. A law is passed or they lose their jobs or their homes, like with the bank crashes, and they think they suddenly jump into what's really going on. And there's lots of real information, flawed information, distorted information, spun information out there to trap you back into it. They don't want you, at the top, to get out of your trap. You've been conditioned your whole life not to see what truth is. And even your behavior, your own personal behavior, you have to question, because you've all been conditioned to be self-destructive. Self-destructive towards yourself. You won't have a family, generally. If you do, it's dysfunctional. And of course, the media and the entertainment system, which is the cultural industry, make sure that that happens. No one's happy with any partner because you're not supposed to be, in this day and age, and therefore, you're at the mercy of those who rule you. Very, very simple. And the big boys talked about this a long time ago and published many, many books about it. Isn't it odd that the top capitalists wanted to end the family unit the same as Karl Marx did too and Lenin? Because the bankers funded the other boys. Back with more after this.

Hi, folks. I'm Alan Watt. We're talking about the real world. Not the one that you're given by the media and your pals around you. Because they've all been conditioned, as well, by the same data overload from the same sources. That's how you're trained. It starts with school and then the media takes over and movies and fiction and you're being prepared for what's to come next and next and next and next. It's called predictive programming. It sounds familiar so you think it must be inevitable that this sort of thing must happen. And it's all, basically, stored in your subconscious. Your conscious mind doesn't take lots of it in and you bring it up to peruse it once in a while, but your subconscious has got it there, so therefore, when the real thing happens, you'll think, oh I guess that's normal... that's called progress...etc., etc. and you don't check it or even find out why someone is defining a particular thing as progress. Now that's how perfect the training is. It really is perfect training. Everyone's been trained. When you see trends put out, trends are very old ideas, it didn't start with the computer, and the newspapers, remember, were owned back in the 30's and 40's by a handful of people, who got together to decide how many newspapers they needed that would influence all the rest of the newspapers; in other words they'd make the lead and the rest would simply follow them. And they came up with it. It was all the big boys (the Rockefellers etc) that sat there and made up the collection of newspapers that would control a whole nation. And today it's much, much easier with instant access to a computer and cell phones and everything else. It's all coming from the same sources but people never question the data that's stuffed into them. And every year more people are born and once they're five and six and seven years of age, they don't question either the system that they're born into at that moment, at that time. They think it must be quite natural, because the adults would stop it if it wasn't good for them. We've all been through it, you see.

Now I've gone through the history, a lot of the history to do with depopulation, in the past, and the big organizations that were funded by the big boys (the big club that started this whole world empire business) and how they funded it. And they've got so many organizations out today, with depopulation and elevating different kinds of people who are gender differences and so on, up to the top, above all the rest and the media makes a big deal like it's a great thing; isn't this wonderful? Is it really? Why is it wonderful? Why are they telling us it's wonderful? How come the end of the family unit, as you knew it, it had to be destroyed? As I say, the top bankers who funded the Royal Institute for International Affairs, Council on Foreign Relations and the Fabian Society also funded the Communists, who also wanted the same goal. How come? No one thinks about it.

Now, in Canada it says,

"Opposition MPs questioned the motives behind a call by Conservative MP [Member of Parliament] Stephen Woodworth to study the Criminal Code definition of [a] human being. They say it naturally leads to a debate on abortion."

Alan: It says,

“Opposition MPs questioned the motives behind a call, by conservative member of parliament, Steven Woodworth, to study the Criminal Code definition of a human being...”

Alan: It says,

“NDP and Liberal MPs raised the question in speeches Friday that called for their colleagues to vote against Conservative MP Stephen Woodworth’s motion to study when life begins.”

Alan: Like it’s a big mystery or something.

“Woodworth’s private member’s motion would set up a special parliamentary committee to examine the current definition of a human being. That definition says a child becomes human when it has fully exited its mother’s body.”

Alan: Remember they’re trying to change it all, until you can kill children up to the age of three and then they’ll extend it from then on. You understand, eventually it’ll go on to any age group. The government just will declare, there’s too many folk in this area, this sector, so everyone at this certain age or are born on this particular date, turn yourselves in for annihilation. And you think I’m kidding. I’m not kidding at all. I know where it’s all going. It’s supposed to. The problem is too, people will start to accept it, like Logan’s Run, the movie. Watch it.

“MPs spent an hour last April debating the motion. Friday was the second allotted hour of debate, with a vote coming next Wednesday. Woodworth says the definition, found in section 223 of the Criminal Code, is based on a 400-year-old British law that should be updated to reflect modern medical and scientific knowledge.”

Alan: “Modern medical and scientific knowledge.” What a liar this guy is.

“Section 223 falls under the homicide provisions of the Criminal Code, which define what constitutes homicide — causing the death of a human being.”

Alan: So they simply rule it out; you’re not a human being and that’s it. And it goes into:

“Fertilized egg ‘not a class of people.’ Liberal MP Massimo Pacetti and New Democrat MP Irene Mathysen pointed to Woodworth’s admission that he is opposed to abortion, arguing putting limits on the procedure is his end goal.”

Alan: So, they go into it all, as they go through this fight to decide for all of us, mind you, what’s to happen in the future. Is that why you vote people in to politics? Is that what government’s supposed to be about? Hmm? So, I’ll put this link up tonight. And it's strange, this, today, because you see, the trend idea I mentioned earlier is always being put upon you and you're unaware of it. You'll hear similar things or related things from the same sources at the same time or within a few days of each other and it's all to embed itself into your subconscious mind. The neuroscientists talk about this technique very openly. It's common. It's very simple. And they're way beyond that simple technique, as well.

Now, going back to the big boys who helped plan this part of the system you're living through today, who talked about they could convince the public to do anything. Bertrand Russell worked with quite a few organizations (world organizations) that were given top clearance by the British authority (the London authority – let's call it that) and the U.S. authorities, to create new cultures for the western world, especially in America. And he said that, eventually with the proper techniques and scientific techniques, we'll be able to convince anybody of anything. And they have arrived at that point, you understand. And it works awfully well. He also said too, they'd create a narcissistic and hedonistic people for the western cultures, as they'd bring them down. Fewer would have children, he said. And they'd promote all the different things you're hearing today, special people get up to the top; and the folk that used to be the old kind, the normal kind, now we're kind of blasé. So, here comes narcissism to the extreme and it's getting worse and worse all the time, like that article I put out yesterday to do with the big –I call it the “plump fest,” down in San Francisco, with all these folk dressed in spandex with all their flab and fat hanging out, you know it's getting so bad. Now, here's an article here.

Alan: She got married to herself.

“... in a symbolic wedding ceremony. The 36-year-old divorced mom of three wore blue satin and clutched a bouquet of white roses as she walked down the aisle before a gathering of 45 friends and family members in Fargo, North Dakota. She vowed to “to enjoy inhabiting my own life and to relish a lifelong love affair with my beautiful self,” reports Fargo's InForum newspaper.”

Alan: So, you see, you're going to see more and more of this. And you're actually seeing the effects of conditioning and mental illness, raised as something that's to be applauded, you see. Feel good about yourself. You deserve it. All the ads you've had for all these years. Go on. Just do it.

France, of course...

“France is set to ban the words ‘mother’ and ‘father’ from all official documents under controversial plans to legalise [homosexual] marriage”

Alan: They say “gay” here but “gay” is discriminatory against other folk because that would mean that only homosexuals are happy, you see. It says,

“The move which has outraged Catholics means only the word ‘parents’ would be used in identical marriage ceremonies for all heterosexual and same-sex couples. The draft law states that 'marriage is a union of two people, of different or the same gender'."

Alan: And that goes on and on and on. So, this is a big, big agenda that's been on the go for an awful long time. And you should perhaps question those who do get up into power and what their goals are and what you're really putting into power. Maybe it's a natural order down through history, the worst ones, like, you know, everyone who's got "the Great" behind their name, you know. They're generally of that persuasion and they love slaughtering people on the battlefield and having statues of men half-naked and stuff all surrounding them. I'm not kidding. That's how it is.

Now, here's this one too that comes in. See, what I'm talking about is trends; this is a trend. It's been put out for the last week, these articles, to get you conditioned to things to come.

"Denmark is tightening rules on sperm donation after one donor was found to have passed on a rare genetic condition to at least five of the 43 babies he is thought to have fathered. Neurofibromatosis type 1 (NF1) produces tumours that affect the nervous system, and the affected sperm is thought to have been used in 10 countries."

Alan: Here's the joys of something they're trying to applaud as a wonderful thing.

"The sperm bank has been criticised for failing to screen for the condition. Donors will now only be allowed to donate enough for 12 inseminations. Denmark has liberal sperm donation policies that appeal to women who want to conceive using artificial insemination. The Copenhagen sperm bank Nordisk Cryobank said it was aware of five babies that had been born with NF1. The clinic's director, Peter Bower, told Agence France-Presse that confidentiality rules meant he was unable to give detail on how old the children were, or where they lived. But he said the donor was known to have provided sperm to women prior to October 2008, in countries inside and outside Europe. He said Nordisk Cryobank did not stop using the sperm immediately because it could not be sure the donor was responsible for passing on the condition."

Alan: So it says,

"The donated sperm was used by 14 different fertility clinics..."

Alan: And that they're "shaken and shocked" etc, blah-blah-blah. Anyway, this disease:

"It can produce a wide range of symptoms - from unusual skin pigmentation, to serious and disfiguring non-cancerous tumours which can sometimes turn cancerous. It can also cause learning difficulties, problems with vision, and an abnormally curved spine."

Alan: I've known children that had that and it's pretty nasty.

"There is no treatment for the condition, but the symptoms can be managed."

Alan: With lots and lots and lots of surgery, if it's on the spine. Anyway, that's the one article there about that. But then you go into this one and here's the retaliation trying to make it sound like it's a wonderful happy thing. And it starts off again, in Denmark. And there's this real dweeb of a guy on a bicycle that's shaped like a spermatozoon. Right? Imagine having a job where you're riding a bike that's supposed to be a spermatozoon. And it says,

"Selecting a potential father for your children, it turns out, is not unlike shopping online. 'A lot of our clients typically want their donor to be at least 180cm [5ft 11in] tall and have blue eyes,' says Peter Bower, director of Nordic Cryobank..."

Alan: The one I just mentioned there that's giving out all this bad sperm. So this is the retaliation, you see, to try to overcome the bad news. It says,

"Customers narrow their computer search to eliminate men who are under or over a certain weight in kilos."

Hi, folks. I'm Alan Watt. We're talking about the trends that are put out, deliberately, at the same time, to condition you and to get you to accept things as being quite normal as they change gears and go the next step and the next step and the next step and prepare your minds in advance to accept it all as being quite natural. And you never think it's a big, big agenda here, to eliminate the old type of humanity, just ordinary folk. You see, it isn't just sperm donors and so on, they want to get in to the sperms and the mitochondria and alter everything, you see, and get perfect little dweebs that will serve them well at the top, but eliminate all the rest. It's happening anyway. Folk are going sterile. That's why a lot of folk are using these sperm banks; the rest of them just don't like guys. Anyway, it says,

"Selecting a potential father for your children, it turns out, is not unlike shopping online. Customers narrow their computer search to eliminate men who are under or over a certain weight in kilos. They can click on a candidate's profile and, for a fee, download an audio interview and a photograph of him as a baby."

Alan: It's probably all fake but it doesn't matter.

"Staff also provide a few sentences giving their impression of donors - a physical description or an illuminating detail"

Alan: Like this one's more bucks than the last one, I guess. It's all to do with bucks, in the end, as they do their big marketing campaign here to sell. Anyway,

"...none of the information will identify an individual, unless he has chosen to be traceable. In Denmark, sperm donation does not have to come with a name and telephone number - unlike in Britain and in a fast-increasing number of other European countries. That has made Denmark something of a Mecca for foreign women who want to conceive by artificial insemination, because it has no shortage of officially screened and tested semen."

Alan: Well I just mentioned the one before, the same clinic is giving out duff stuff that's creating children with awful problems.

"Danish clinics which provide insemination (often for a fraction of the price of similar treatment in the UK) have three main types of customer: lesbian couples, heterosexual couples and single women. It is the final category which is growing - by far - the fastest."

Alan: It says. And again, a lot of this is PR, as well, too, you know. Anyway, it says,
"Samples are delivered from the sperm bank to the aptly named Stork Klinik..."

Alan: Stork Clinic. Oh ha ha.

"... across Copenhagen, in the industry's latest gimmick; a bicycle in the shape of a single sperm cell."

Alan: Which dweeb would peddle that through the streets? Huh?

"Deep-frozen in liquid nitrogen, the samples are stored in the spherical head of the sperm,"

Alan: The bicycle, that is.

"just in front of the handlebars."

Alan: I guess it's to simulate being horny. Anyway, it says,

"The premises are the epitome of Scandinavian design..."

Alan: And all the rest of it. And then they go through their big PR that they want the women to feel like queens and all the rest of it. They want their bucks is what they want. And I'll tell you something: they do tamper, they do tamper, with the ovum and the sperm. And they follow you down through life - those children in all these countries - because there are bigger powers above this, at the top, that authorized it all, to see what they've created, you understand. Constant sampling and testing, for the fools who use it. And here's another one. And this is from the BBC, as well. Now when it comes from the top, you know you're getting trends, to shape your mind so that everything's normal now, you see. This is what they're trying to tell you. Everything's normal. All that old stuff is gone. This is normal

now. This is the new normal. Why would people be given massive grants to study this article?

"Eunuchs..."

Alan: Eunuch, right?

"... reveal clues to why women live longer than men."

Alan: That's how they present it. You understand, the headline is always a psychological presentation to throw you off what they're really getting at. But it says,

"Castration had a huge effect on the lifespans of Korean men, according to an analysis of hundreds of years of eunuch "family" records."

Alan: Now, someone's getting paid big bucks to go through all of this.

"They lived up to 19 years longer than uncastrated men from the same social class and even outlived members of the royal family."

Alan: It says,

"The study is published in the journal Current Biology. Castration before puberty prevents the shift from boy to man. One of the scientists involved in the study, Dr Cheol-Koo Lee from Korea University, said: 'The records said that eunuchs had some women-like appearances such as no moustache hair, large breasts, big hips and thin high-pitched voice.'"

Alan: A lot of people are like that today because they're getting dosed with estrogen and estrogen mimickers, as you can obviously see.

"Eunuchs had important roles in many cultures from protecting harems to castrati superstar singing sensations."

Alan: And then it goes on about how wonderful it all was. It says,

"They could not have children of their own, so they adopted girls or castrated boys."

Alan: And then they go into the reasons for it, you know. And they come to the conclusion that perhaps testosterone is bad for you. And what's the point of all this? Well, they're trying to tell you to be more female and let them do something to you. They're already doing a lot to you already, as I say. Look around you. The physical appearance of a lot of guys has completely changed. They've been getting dosed with these xenoestrogens and the inoculations. And remember the estrogens alone and the bisphenol A's hit you from the age of 8 to 12 weeks in the womb, if you're a male, and you ain't going to be a proper fella later on and you'll probably be sterile. And the UN's own records validate all this stuff because they're all happy with it. That's why they never change it, all these things that are causing it. They're awfully happy with it. But they keep telling you that the biggest problem in the West (for the people in the West, that is - not for the UN) is infertility; the most growing problem that they have. Why do you think that is? Isn't that odd that the big boys talked about sterilizing most of the folk a hundred years ago and they've had meetings every year (world meetings) about the same thing and it's happening? Is that just coincidence? You got to break through into reality folks. It's not happening by itself and it's not a mistake. It's not oversights. "Oh we didn't notice. Oh we made a mistake." No, it's none of that stuff. This is the plan. Get used to it. It's the plan. And again too, trend-trend-trend. It's all related.

"The Department of Education is giving morning-after pills and other birth-control drugs to students at 13 high schools, The Post has learned. School nurse offices stocked with the contraceptives can dispense "Plan B" emergency contraception and other oral or injectable birth control to girls without telling their parents..."

Alan: Back with more after this break.

{Break ♪- You're listening to the Republic Broadcasting Network, because you can handle the truth!}

Hi, folks. I am Alan Watt, Cutting Through the Matrix and going through this set of trends that's come out recently. We're all getting prepared for things to come. And it will tie in with many other articles too at the high highest level and they certainly do but this article here is about New York and how the schools are just dishing out contraceptives, morning-after pills and even injections without telling their parents and so on. That's common pretty-well everywhere because that's the big UN agenda that they're all on board with. Mind you, all they get taught at school now is sex-sex-sex and then they watch nothing but music television where it's all about sex-sex-sex. So, monkey see, monkey do and that's what folks do. It's so easy to train the general public, especially if you grab them young, you see.

And tonight too, I'll put up this, it's an article. People have heard of the "Millennium Goals" for the United Nations. It's also called "Agenda 21." Well, they're updating it into the next phase. Now that they've got everything else worked out, they're going into the next phase. It says,

"The UN panel starting work on a post-2015 development vision faces huge pressure to cover issues left out of the original goals..."

Alan: So, they're getting all the rest of the stuff in now.

"... to decide who to consult and how to set measurable targets."

Alan: And it goes into all the money they're getting and they want millions more and hundreds of millions more. And they're throwing it across the planet, you know what it's for, again, it's depopulation and so on and taking over the land etc, etc and energy and everything else for the big corporations. It says,

"The MDGs, which were agreed at a meeting in New York in September 2000, set out eight specific – and ambitious – goals for the international community...”

Alan: What is the “international community,” folks? Just because you keep hearing something, is it real?

“... including eradicating extreme poverty and hunger, achieving universal primary school education and reducing childhood mortality rates.”

Alan: Well, they do that by not having as many children because they sterilize lots of them (the adults, you see). They’re so clever the way they word things. But you have to go in to their actual articles.

“Some of those goals in some countries are expected to be achieved by the 2015 deadline...”

Alan: This is the redistribution of wealth as well, remember, folks. It goes through these big NGOs under the umbrella of the United Nations.

“... others most definitely will not. But the MDGs have had an enormous impact on the international donor community...”

Alan: So you have the international community and also the international donor community, no matter if you said yes or no to it. And it says,

“‘Now everybody knows what’s at stake and how important this is,’ says Olav Kjørven, director of the Bureau of Development Policy...”

Alan: “Development policy.” Isn’t that a very vague thing?

“at the UN Development Programme (UNDP). ‘So now everyone with a particular interest will want to make sure that their particular issue is covered in the next framework.’ The activists lobbying the hardest are likely to be those whose issues were ignored completely by the MDGs. Topics like climate change, human rights...”

Alan: They’re going to redefine human rights.

Alan: This is straight out of the Communist Manifesto, isn’t it? And that was all a farce as well, in reality.

“Deciding on the key issues will be a tall order for the committee, officially known as the High-Level Panel on the Post-2015 Development Agenda. But the committee members will also have to deal with questions such as whether to set measurable targets; whether to focus on ends rather than means...”

Alan: So, you get there any way you can.

"Those findings will then be presented to UN member states for consideration in September 2013."

Alan: So, it's going to be full-steam ahead with the same agenda. It never stops, you see. It's an ongoing agenda. It's a never-ending story. It's all planned. It was all planned over a hundred years ago; every step of it, right down to how long it would take, per generation, to alter each faction of society to accept these things. Time lines, you see.

Getting back to the original one with the trends that you've all to have soaked in to your heads without thinking much about them (but you're conditioned by them). Look at the way the media pitches this to you, like it's a great thing:

"A Chinese hospital has introduced a special machine to collect sperm ' automatically."

Alan: This is like a big fun thing, eh?

"The screen on the machine plays porn while the "sperm collection pipe" adjusts according to the height of the donor. Users, who must wear a condom, can also adjust the machine's frequency, speed, force, and temperature."

Alan: It's a vibrator for God's sake and if it's made in China it ain't going to last long. It says,

"According to Doctor Zhu Guoxin, director of the urology department at Zhengzhou Central Hospital in Henan Province, the machine has been used for six months by around ten men a day."

Alan: Now, why is China concerned about collecting sperm? See they're also in on the same thing of creating new slaves for the future, even more obedient, fitter, longer lasting at work. And they probably won't even need any entertainment especially if you give them these kind of machines and stuff and lots of batteries.

"However, contrary to internet reports that the machine is used for sperm donation, Doctor Zhu said it is mainly used by infertile men to collect sperm for medical examinations."

Alan: Who's kidding who? Like they're really worried about infertility in China. Have you read their articles from their own... see we have the G20 for the West but the same boys that set up the G20 (which is the Royal Institute for International Affairs and CFR) set up one for China, because they had to be the big boys over in the Far East (over Australia, New Zealand, and so on). And they have their own group, Group of 77, it's called. And they demanded that we follow their examples in depopulation, by the way, if you read their articles. Go in and read them. You won't see the mainstream talking about them, but you'll find them.

"He said: 'The best way for sperm donation is still masturbation, as condoms may have spermicidal powders or layers.' 'This machine is mainly for the use of medical examination for infertile men, some of whom have difficulties masturbating to collect sperm.'"

Alan: He says. And it says,

"Coming soon to a hospital near you, folks."

Alan: Well, I tell you, eh? Anyway, we're being hit by so many things at the same time. And that's how they do total war. I hope you understand this is called "total war" (what you're going through, what you've been living through and what's to come). Total war, meant destruction of all the old system that worked. And destruction of all the things that would stand up against the new regime and then replacing gradually and conditioning each generation to accept the new. And it's all happened pretty well. But they're not finished with you yet. You've got to still kill off, dumb down a certain amount of people at the present to bring down the populations. When they had their big world meetings and Kissinger had his world meetings on depopulation, he put his bills through for fast take-down of the third world countries. He said it was the greatest enemy of the state, was overpopulation in other countries—and at home; that was the little bit in brackets. And in the West, what they would do is give you crippling diseases. Crippling diseases would make you ineligible for a partner, you see. And that's happened too, to a lot of people. But in the third world countries, because they have very little news coming out of them and the media are all owned by the same boys that create this whole world system, they wouldn't mention the fact they were dying off like crazy with different diseases. But they take the West down with slow debilitating degenerative diseases.

"Dangerous Banned Vaccine Repackaged and Given New Name"

Alan: It says.

"Yet again the UK government has allowed a previously banned and dangerous vaccine onto the UK market, by repackaging it and giving it a new name in a bid to deceive parents."

Alan: Well, of course. That's the only reason it's been done.

"The first time the UK government tried this tactic and succeeded was in 1988 when the JCVI (Joint Committee on Vaccinations and Immunizations) sanctioned the MMR vaccine Pluserix for use in the UK. Pluserix had previously been banned in Canada, causing thousands of children to suffer irreversible side effects as a result. This vaccine went on to cause the same devastation in the UK."

Alan: And it says,

"Dr. Lucjia Tomljenovic gave a full description of these devastating side effects, including encephalitis, bilateral deafness and meningitis, in her paper The vaccination policy and the Code of Practice of the Joint Committee on Vaccination and Immunisation (JCVI): Are They at Odds? Appalled at the committee's behavior, she exposed exactly what was being said behind the closed doors of UK's JCVI. She wrote: 'Thus, instead of re-evaluating the vaccination policy, at least until safety concerns were fully evaluated, the JCVI choose to support the existing policy based on incomplete evidence that was available at that time.'

Alan: So, they weren't caring about safety.

"One child who became profoundly deaf in one ear after she received the now banned vaccination, Katie Stephen, is still fighting for compensation to this day."

Alan: Well, good luck in getting it.

"Her mother, Wendy Stephen, is furious at her daughter's treatment and told The Telegraph in a recent article: 'She wasn't born this way. This was done to her by the Department of Health. They distributed pamphlets arguing that this was the right thing to do for your child, and not just that, but the right thing to do for herd immunity...'"

Alan: That is true: we're just a herd now. We're farmed.

"...in the UK against these three illnesses.' Obviously not learning from the error of their ways, the UK government has once again potentially put thousands of lives at risk by re-introducing a banned, this time unlicensed vaccine onto the UK market. In June 2012, the single mumps vaccine Medi-Mumps cultured on dog kidney cells was advertised for use at a number of private clinics as an alternative option to the MMR. It has since been discovered however, that Medi-Mumps is in fact the banned, unlicensed vaccine Pavivac. To cover this up, just like the MMR vaccine Pluserix, the vaccine was repackaged and given a new name. Through intensive research, we have learned that on September 13, 2012, the UK's MHRA (Medicines and Healthcare Products Regulatory Agency) wrote a press release titled Advertising Investigations. The MHRA wrote: '13 September 2012- The MHRA was made aware of information presented on the Children's Immunisation Centre (CIC) website about Medi-Mumps and a related press release. The MHRA was concerned that the information provided an unbalanced view of the safety and efficacy of the vaccine because it did not mention the MHRA's concerns and previous CSM advice or that the product was unlicensed.'"

Alan: The product is not licensed.

"We understood that the Medi-Mumps vaccine is manufactured from the same stock and processed in the same way as Pavivac mumps vaccine. The MHRA, acting on advice from an independent advisory committee, the Committee on Safety of Medicines (CSM), has for a number of years objected to the importation of the Pavivac product because there is insufficient information available to assure its safety, quality and efficacy."

Alan: And then it says,

"Don't say we didn't warn you. Amazingly in May of this year on this very site, I wrote an article titled New Vaccine Made From Dog Cells May Trigger Allergy to Dogs. My article highlighted the fact that a new single mumps vaccine had been slipped into private clinics in the UK through the back door."

Alan: So it goes into the history of it. So they just repackage the same things that are giving folk meningitis, encephalitis and deafness and brain problems and they get off with it, folks. They get off with it. It's for the greater good, you know, they keep telling us. "The greater good." You know, killing a good lot of us and crippling the rest.

Also, I'll put up this tonight too. It's quite interesting because some of the big corporations... and you think they're independent corporations to do with food. I personally don't. I think that the big corporations to do with food are all interrelated; very, very closely in the big agenda... the big agenda. Because when you go into all the other associations that are into killing a lot of people off across the planet, getting wars on across the planet and killing off different segments of societies and getting folk at home killed off as well, you find out it takes cooperation between the big boys to do what they're doing.

This one is about what everyone was taught was a good thing for them, to get them off butter and lard. And if you wonder why folk are really fat today, it's because of what you're eating now that's replacing it because your body can't break it down, once it's in you. Anyway, it says,

"In the Kitchen with Mother Linda"

Alan: It says,

"On April 25, 2001, Proctor and Gamble (P&G) put its product Crisco on the auction block, just ten years short of its 100th birthday. Crisco, initially made with hydrogenated cottonseed oil..."

Alan: I mentioned cottonseed oil the other day because, why, it has a particular substance in it, that sterilizes men especially, you see. It says,

"... is the quintessential imitation food, and the first to make its way into American kitchens."

Alan: Gossypol is the chemical.

"The story of Crisco begins innocently enough in pre-Civil-War America when candle maker William Proctor and his brother-in-law, soap-maker James Gamble, joined forces to compete with fourteen other soap and candle makers..."

Alan: And it says,

"P&G entered the shortening business out of necessity. In the 1890s, the meat packing monopoly controlled the price of lard and tallow needed to make candles and soap. P&G took steps to gain control of the cottonseed oil business from farm to factory. By 1905, they owned eight cottonseed mills in Mississippi. In 1907, with the help of German chemist E. C. Kayser, P&G developed the science of hydrogenation. By adding hydrogen atoms to the fatty acid chain, this revolutionary industrial process transformed liquid cottonseed oil into a solid that resembled lard."

Alan: Then they had a massive marketing campaign of course. They brought in guys like Bernays (it doesn't mention it here about Bernays etc) to tell people how good it was for you and how healthy it was and all the rest of it. And how they did it all and how they got the whole country and then the whole world using this substitute, you see, for butter and lard. And out of that you got margarine and as I say, you got their Crisco. And it goes on and on and on, but it's really interesting to see what they were up to; the fact that they lie about everything, of course and tell you it's more digestible. It isn't. Folk who eat even french fries now, it's all done in that soggy oil that's GM, of course, from GM plants, they have a hard time digesting it, as opposed to lard. Apart from that too, once it's into your system and it becomes fat, you can't break it down anymore. That's why there's so many obese folk around, if you didn't know. I'll put this article up tonight, for those who want to have a little perusal about it too.

And this article here too, is interesting. Again, it fits in with this meme or trend that's going out right now, you see.

"Six Teams Take On New Challenges with HHMI Collaborative Innovation Awards"

Alan: "Collaborative Innovation Awards." Big money involved to study these things. And governments are throwing your cash at them.

"Six teams of scientists with wide-ranging expertise will come together to solve challenging problems with the support of new Howard Hughes Medical Institute Collaborative Innovation Awards (HCIA). HHMI will invest $40 million over the next four years to enable the teams to carry out potentially transformative research. Together, the teams - each headed by an HHMI investigator -- include 28 researchers from 20 institutions in the United States, Germany, and Israel. Each collaborator will receive funds from HHMI to cover their research budget for the HCIA project, and the flexibility to pursue their best ideas."

Alan: Then there's a big PR thing and so on. But you have to scroll down to find out what they're really into. And what they're into, they're going to give awards, they gave awards already in 2008 for the previous study,

"... to tackle scientific problems such as surveying the effects of gene imprinting on the brain in mice..."

Alan: I mean they're really concerned about mice. You understand, this is for humans. Brain imprinting. Gene imprinting.

"... and engineering a wireless sensor for monitoring intraocular pressure in patients with glaucoma."

Alan: Do you really believe this? They don't care about glaucoma. It says,

"HHMI investigator Peter Walter, a 2008 awardee who led a team investigating whether manipulating protein quality-control pathways could be beneficial for treating disease..."

Alan: You understand, things are used first for warfare purposes in every field, in every area. I hope you realize that. Because if you can manipulate the protein quality-control pathways, you can devastate society. Anyway, it says,

"Walter and his collaborators at the University of California, San Francisco and the Science for Life Foundation in Chile developed small molecules that alter the way cells detect and respond to unfolded proteins, and used them to reveal a potential drug target for treating multiple myeloma."

Alan: I'm sure it was, yeah. Now, here's the music. I'll be back with more on this article, after this break.

{Break ♪}

Hi, folks. I'm back. We're Cutting Through the Matrix. Reading an article about collaborative innovation awards and the new challenges for the new bunch of grants given out to study certain things and they're using animals and insects but believe you me, they've also used human beings in other areas too. But it's all to do with us, not the insects. And it says,

"HHMI investigator Danny Reinberg, another 2008 award recipient, says his Collaborative Innovation team's work on epigenetic influences on behavior..."

Alan: That's like switching certain enzymes and proteins and hormones on and off. They can do it permanently if they want to.

"...has opened up an important new avenue of research in his lab. In 2008, Reinberg, a biochemist, recruited Shelley Berger, an expert on gene regulation at the University of Pennsylvania, and Jürgen Liebig, a leader in the study of insect societies from Arizona State University, to help him explore whether epigenetic regulation – changes that affect gene activity without altering DNA sequence—influences the stereotypical behavior of members of different social castes within ant societies."

Alan: You understand, they're awfully concerned about ants. Do you really believe that? It's for people, folks.

"Since then, Reinberg's project team has determined the complete genome sequences of two species..."

Alan: And blah-blah-blah. But this is all to do with people. They always use everything else except people. But actually they do use people as well, too. I've got articles about that; there's lots of them actually. And I'll put this one up tonight, as well. Also,

"Health Canada reviewing results of French research. Health Canada said Thursday it will take action if its review of a new study that found Canadian-grown genetically modified corn is linked to elevated risks of cancer, organ damage and premature death in rats 'demonstrate a risk' to Canadians."

Alan: Don't believe it, folks, because Canada was the guinea pig for all this GM stuff. It came out at the time when we found out from Britain; it was protesters against the GM food, when Blair was in, that leaked it to Canada, "we don't want to be like Canada". And we were all saying, what are they talking about? Canadians had been eating this stuff for ten years because the government (and it came out in the papers after that) had made a secret deal with Monsanto and others to test it out on us. So, they know what it does to us. So don't believe they're going to do anything about it. This is the agenda, folks. Anyway, it says,

"... modified corn is linked to elevated risks of cancer, organ damage and premature death in rats and 'demonstrate a risk' to Canadians."

Alan: They know exactly what it's been doing to Canadians because in the national health service everything's fed into central computers in Ottawa, immediately from every doctor's office and hospital and so on. It's the perfect place to do the study. That's why they chose Canada. I'll put this link up as well. And of course this article too, to do with that particular study:

"Study finds tumors in rats fed on Monsanto's GM corn"

Alan: From NBC News. It tells you what happened. But they've known this all along. All along.

And talking about sperm and so on and so on and so on, and what they're up to.

"Public consultation launched on techniques to prevent transmission of mitochondrial diseases. The Human Fertility and Embryology Authority..."

Alan: Did you know you had a Human Fertility and Embryology Authority? Did you know that?

"has today launched a public consultation to gather people's views about the social and ethical impact of new techniques to prevent mitochondrial diseases being passed down the maternal line."

Alan: See, it all ties in together. This is in the same day, all these stories.

"The techniques are being developed by Professor Doug Turnbull and colleagues at the Wellcome Trust Centre for Mitochondrial Research at Newcastle University, which was opened on 11 September. They involve transferring nuclear DNA, which contains our genetic make-up, between two human eggs to replace defective mitochondria - the 'batteries' that power the cells in our bodies."

Alan: They said they'd do this a hundred years ago, folks, the big boys in all their books. They knew where it was all going and they made it happen. And they even trained us all to accept it. It says,

"When these batteries fail, patients can develop devastating mitochondrial diseases with symptoms that often affect those tissues most heavily dependent on energy, such as the heart, muscles and brain."

Alan: So, I'll put that one up tonight too. This is all coming out at the same time. They're just bombing us all with articles. Most folk, it filters through their head but it doesn't stay in their conscious. It preps them through subconscious methods, for "oh, well I guess it's natural. It's natural. It had to be this way. It's called progress I suppose. It had to happen. Can't stop it, eh?" Why'd the big boys want all this? They want to have a new species to serve them better, down the road.

From Hamish and myself, from Ontario, Canada, it's goodnight and may your God or your gods go with you.
